Crime is a problem all over the world, and there is nothing that can be done to prevent it. To what extent do you agree or disagree?

(Revised Vision of my student’s essay)

Although many countries impose strict laws to punish criminals, it still tends to be rife all over the world, which makes some people think crime is a problem and nothing can be done to prevent it. However, I personally believe there are many variables that warrant further explanation. (In this stage as division amongst society grows, as to will the crime rate.)

Firstly, there are many reasons behind the prevalent crime rate; hence, to tackle this problem, we should find the root cause and treat them in an appropriate way. Many teenagers become criminals that could result to lack of education or single parent families. Therefore, proper parental guidance and adequate schooling is imperative for teenagers. Moreover, moral awareness can improve people’s thinking and learn to appreciate the rights of others in order to reduce crime rates; thus, government intervention may need to focus more on morals and values through media to promote this initiative.

In addition, unemployment is another part of the reason for crimes rates, and creating more job opportunities would help alleviate this. Increase in police officers on the streets and public transport would prevent crime and make communities safer. Furthermore, poor people who are living below poverty line should be given extra government incentives e.g. financials, relief packages, etc.

To sum up, there are many ways to reduce crime rates and we should identify root causes and treat them on their own merits. E.g. bolster education, morals ethnics’ values, increase job opportunities, and invest more police.
